MET HIS MATCH.

Never heard of Redmond O'Hanlon, the Irish highway robber? Well, that's surprising. Your English Turpins and French Duvals couldn't hold a candle to our highwaymen. But for all his shrewdness he met his match once, and I'll tell you how it was.

Redmond was a fine, strapping, gentlemanly fellow, and a devoted admirer of the ladies—as where is the Irishman that is not—and, what is more, a friend to the poor, as you'll admit when I tell you that his demands for cash were only made on persons who could well afford to meet them, and that he delighted in forcing contributions from those who had the sense of hard landlords to their tenants. There was one of this class whom Redmond never lost an opportunity of taxing, for that was the polite name he gave to his own robberies. Every quarter day this gentleman, or one of his servants—sometimes more than one—used to take a journey of six or seven miles to collect his rents, and as regular as clockwork there was Redmond O'Hanlon, with some stout companions, if necessary, to waylay the collector as he returned home. Every means was used to elude him, but to no purpose. He had spies everywhere and contrived to get the exact information he needed in advance.

So one quarter day, when the gentleman's servants asked him about going for the rents, he swore at O'Hanlon and said he didn't see the use of collecting money to hand it over to him.

Now this gentleman had on his estate a boy called "Jerry the Fool," who had the run of the house and made fun for the family. He had a great conceit for himself, and when he heard what the master said he immediately asked to be allowed to go after the rents for once and declared he would know the way to bring them home. Of course he was only laughed at, but when he represented that no harm would come from trying, as he couldn't do worse than all who had gone before him, the master agreed to humor him. Upon that Jerry made such preparations as he thought suitable, chose the worst horse in the stable—an old hack half blind and three-quarters lame—and started on his enterprise. Nothing occurred on the way. He collected a considerable amount of money, carefully disposed it about his person and started homeward.

Toward evening, as he was quietly jogging along on the old hack and was just entering a long lane with high hedges on each side, a tall, fine looking man rode up to him on a handsome roan mare.

"God save you, my man," says the gentleman.

"God save your honor!" replies Jerry.

"What's your name, my man?" asks the gentleman.

"Jerry the Fool, and I ain't ashamed of it."

The gentleman took no notice of the question. After awhile he says, "That is a fine animal you're riding, Jerry."

"Faith, I'm glad your honor likes it," said Jerry. "But it isn't myself that'd care to take a lease of his life. But he'd serve my turn anyway, for it's not in a hurry I'm traveling—I've only been to the village beyond to collect the master's rents for him."

"Surely he's not such a fool to trust you with that job?"

"Arrah, why not?" asks Jerry in great surprise.

"Why, don't you know that Redmond O'Hanlon's on this road?"

"Redmond O'Hanlon, is it," says Jerry.

"Ugh! That for Redmond O'Hanlon!" says he, snapping his fingers. "Faith, Jerry the Fool is a match for half a dozen of the likes of him any day in the week, and Sunday into the bargain."

The stranger laughed, and then rode on in silence till they came to a very lonely part of the road, when he drew a brace of pistols and told Jerry to hand over all the money he had about him or he'd try if he had any brains by sending a couple of bullets through his head.

"Meela murder!" roars Jerry in surprise and fright. "You don't mean to say your honor's Redmond O'Hanlon?"

"I do indeed. So hand over, my man, and look sharp about it."

"But, faith, it's kill entirely by the master I'll be when I get home without the rent."

"What's that to me?" said O'Hanlon.

"Anyhow," said Jerry, "I must show them that I made a murdering fight for it. Perhaps your honor wouldn't mind firing a shot through my old beaver."

O'Hanlon did so, laughing at the trick.

"And now another through the breast of my coat, and heaven bless you." This was done. "Now just one in the skirt of it, and good luck to your honor."

"But I've discharged both my pistols and don't want the trouble of loading them again for you."

"Faith, I should dearly like a shot through the skirts. It would show I fought desperate. Are you sure your honor hasn't another pistol in your pocket, that you wouldn't mind firing for a poor boy's sake?"

"Confound you! To be sure, I haven't. Hand over the money, or I'll beat you to jelly with my horsewhip."

"Well," says Jerry after a good deal of fumbling, "I suppose, considering the trouble I've had in collecting these rents, your honor won't mind the little bother of going over the hedge after them."

And I threw over a sack, apparently well filled with coin. Half laughing, half angry, the highwayman, first aiming at Jerry with his whip, which he avoided by ducking, dismounted and climbed over the hedge, and no sooner had he done so than Jerry slipped off the old hack and mounted O'Hanlon's horse.

"Bad scan to you, Redmond O'Hanlon!" he bawled. "Didn't I tell you Jerry the Fool was a match for a dozen of you? It's a sack of brass buttons you're gone over the hedge after, you thief of the world!"

And touching the fine mare with the spur he galloped off, singing the old melody, "Go to the mischief and shake yourself."

Glad to Get Rid of Them.

Some years ago a regiment of volunteers was encamped on the outskirts of a country town. Among those whose curiosity led them to the encampment were three hardy laborers.

As the three were strolling round the camp they came across a large tent, over which was written the following notice, "Dinners—as much as you like for a shilling." Being hungry, the three went in to dine.

They began their meal, and after five other parties had come in, dined and gone again they were still busy eating. Presently a young man, evidently one of the attendants, came up, and tapping one of them lightly on the shoulder said in a low voice:

"Here, you chaps, my governor sent me to say that if you like to now he won't charge you anything for what you have already eaten."—Pearson's Weekly.
